Manly artist Dana Lundmark says using clay as the vessel that would carry her sculptures of refugees just didn't make sense to her.

Three of her sculptural pieces are presently showing at the Mu Gallery in the Contemporary Australian Ceramics exhibition.

Three other artists are taking part in this group sculpture exhibition.

The five-time Portia Geach competition finalist for painting, said the vessel to “carry” her sculptures needed to represent the people and their journey.

The vessel is a palm pod and, Lundmark said, its fragility is symbolic of the refugees themselves.

“It’s obviously not a safe thing, not altogether seaworthy,” she said.

“I wanted people to note these were a fragile people travelling in something that was also fragile.”

Gallery owner Mulan Gock said there has been an emotional reaction to it.

“Everyone has a comment,” she said.
